Mr. Naveedul Haq for applicants.

This Revision Application is filed against the orders passed by the two Courts below. The subject matter of the controversy is an interlocutory order passed by the trial Court.

Counsel for applicants claims that the injunctive orders are operating in this Revision Application. He further points out that in the first round of litigation the appellate Court remanded the matter to the trial Court for a decision on all issues. The trial Court allowed the interim application pending in the suit which order was maintained by the appellate Court out of which this Revision Application has arisen. Be that as it may, since it is also claimed by the counsel for applicants that now the counsels for the parties have argued the matter finally before the Civil Court, in such a situation it would be proper that some directions be given to trial Court. Accordingly, the trial Court is directed to pass a judgment within ten days from today in case it is ripe for a judgment however in case the trial Court has not yet heard the arguments of the learned counsel for the parties, it will fix the matter for final arguments, as the matter is already ripe. The interim order already passed in this Revision Application shall continue till the announcement of the judgment which may not take more than ten days from today. The compliance be filed to MIT-II of this Court.

Revision Application stands disposed of along with listed application in the above terms.
